Flat Rolls?

Sandy Walter has brought the ideas of Jamie Oliver into the kitchen here at Yellingbo Primary School with the Food Revolution this week. We all know about Jamie's long-running crusade to improve the diets of school children in Britain; but now he has brought his revolution to Australia. This week in schools all over the country, students have made sandwiches from a recipe that includes a whole lot of healthy options for lunch. (A copy of the recipe is available on our website as well as being attached to this newsletter.)

Speaking generally about the diets of students at this school, I would have to say that they are mostly pretty good; the lunches brought from home seem to be very healthy. It's only when students have lunch orders from the shop that we see a lot of high fat/empty carb food being consumed. Let's face it, there's nothing more likely to slow you down than deep fried chicken munchies or a mocca dog.

These sorts of lunch are okay for "sometimes food", as they say on Sesame Street, but I would hate to see students eating them every day.

Welcome!

Congratulations to Sally and Greg Pratt on the arrival of new baby Evelyn. Joel is cock-a –hoop about his new baby sister. I wonder how long that will last.

We all hope that things continue to go well for the baby and mother.

Linda Crook

You may have been wondering what has happened to Linda Lloyd lately; she has not been evident in the office as usual. Well, Linda has been quite unwell for a while and had exploratory surgery on Tuesday to sort out what was going on. I spoke to her yesterday and she was recovering well, but may not be around for a few days yet.

Which leads me to my next point: because Linda has not been in to work, there is likely to be a bit of a wait to get things done – I am afraid I'm not as efficient as Linda in the office department. It takes me time to find things and I can't always do things for people immediately. Please be patient, and put things that need attention into the post box in the foyer. I will get to things eventually.

Have a good week,

Rick.
